

The Changing Landscape in Transportation Planning

Jeff Moore, AICP
Kentucky Transportation Cabinet

Hard work got me
where I am----Where am I?

In the beginning of the interstate era, we built the greatest freeway system in the world; but aesthetics and preserving the environment weren't part of that mission. Now we need another transformation. We're here to define a new vision, to change how we do business.”

We can no longer think of transportation in the terms of what happens when the public “hits the road”. We need to begin thinking of transportation before the public walks out their front doors.

We must provide options to meet their transportation needs and improve their quality of life, whether those options are connections to highways, bikeways, sidewalks, public transit, or intermodal freight delivery.
